1.  Koenigsberg (Kaliningrad) was steadily growing as a fishing harbor. The fishing trust of the three Baltic states has headquarters in Koenigsberg and is officially called Baltgosrybtrest (Baltic State Fishing Trust). The catches from the Baltic Sea and the North Sea are landed and dispatched from Koenigsberg. It was stated that, in 1954, the TUNGUS carried 5 fish loads from the North Sea to Koenigsberg. The TUNGUS was the only vessel of her size owned by Baltgosrybtrest. The catches from the Baltic Sea were landed direct from the catching vessels in Koenigsberg. The two Polish vessels, NARVIK and TOBRUK sailed under Soviet charter for three years and were used as supply vessels for the Soviet fishing fleet. 25X1
2. The town of Koenigsberg has not been cleaned up or reconstructed. Houses, which could have been repaired four or five years ago, are now dilapidated. Vast areas of ruins in the middle of the town were shrub-covered and hares and rabbits had settled down there. Men were known to hunt rabbits in the center of town. 25X1
